It Wasn't Me!: Telling the Truth by Brian Moses

@Michael5 That has nothing to do with subject-verb agreement. The difference between if it weren't and if it wasn't is that the former is irrealis (traditionally called "past subjunctive") and the latter realis. An example of realis was: "I apologize if I was rude." (Were is not appropriate here because the speaker doesn't want to deny being rude.)An example of irrealis were: "If I were you, I ...
