Leica Mini Zoom. The Leica Mini Zoom is probably the most interesting from the Mini series. Zoom lenses usually don't get my favors but this 35-70mm f/4.0-7.6 Vario Elmar seem to be surprisingly sharp. Sure its variable aperture won't compare to fixed lenses but it can cover most situations for the casual shooter who wants good image quality.

To give you an idea, my favorite cameras are small rangefinders and compacts, and for SLRs, small manual focus models from the late 70s and early 80s (your Minolta X-700s or Nikon EMs). My only serious digital camera is a Fuji X100S. If this is the kind of equipment you prefer, the Riva Mini may work for you as well.

The Minolta Riva Mini - Guest Review by Torsten Kathke

The model received adverse comment for it when it was released. This new Leica is slower and it's lens hasn't got the excuse of a retracting design intended to make a small flat package. It seems to me that Fuji have re-defined the kit zoom lens with their 18-55 f2.8-4 kit zoom for their X series cameras.
